At Shekinah, we believe that everyone deserves the opportunity to live a safe, connected, and flourishing life.

We work alongside people experiencing some of life's most complex challenges, including homelessness, poverty, trauma, poor mental and physical health, substance use, social isolation, and exclusion.

We know lasting change rarely comes from services alone. It grows through relationships, belonging, and the confidence that comes from feeling respected, understood, and supported. This belief shapes everything we do.

The Opportunity

We are looking for two compassionate and skilled practitioners to join our highly regarded team. You will support people who have experienced significant adversity and trauma to rebuild confidence, strengthen their sense of safety, and work towards goals that matter to them.

How you will make a difference

This is more than a referral or case-management role. You will work relationally; building the trust, safety, and connection that enable meaningful change. Through practical support, advocacy and encouragement, you will develop trusting relationships that help people move forward at their own pace. You will coordinate services, opportunities, and support networks so that people can navigate complex systems without doing so alone.

You may be visiting people at home, undertaking activities on the streets, in the community, or meeting at the office; meaning that you have a lot of freedom. This is a big responsibility, so you are confident, adaptable, and are able use your own initiative. You can work independently and feel comfortable as a lone worker; you are at your best when no day is the same.
